STERILE ROOM WITH CONTROLLED AIR PRESSURE

The invention relates to a room with a controlled air pressure.

It is well known that in hospitals there is a need to provide rooms which have a sterile atmosphere and may in addition, have air which is at negative or positive pressure.

At the moment, the capital cost for building such a room is substantial because it is usual to provide such a facility throughout the establishment. It is an object of this invention to provide the desired room at a much lower cost.

According to the invention, in one aspect there is provided a room containing sterilisation unit incorporating an ultraviolet light source, an exterior wall of the room having a valve, the valve being operable to maintain a negative pressure or a positive pressure within the room.

The valve may take any convenient form, .e.g. a flap, operable under control means and in a circuit with pump means arranged to extract or introduce air into the room.

The sterilisation unit is preferably a mobile one and most preferably according to the invention described and claimed in Application GB 02.24897.9 (Agent's Ref: P03763GB).

The room may be an individual room for single or multiple occupancy by patients.

In order that the invention may be well understood it will now be described by way of illustration only with reference to the accompanying drawings, in which:

Figure 2 is the same but for a room where the atmosphere is at positive pressure.

In each case the room contains a bed for a patient and a bathroom. The room has a main entry/exit door system arranged to allow access with minimal effect on the atmosphere within the room. In each case, the corner of the room is a unit U, according to our patent applications GB 0224427.5 (our ref: P03682GB) and GB 0224897.9 (our ref: P03763GB).

The unit provides a highly efficient device for controlling the risk of airborne infection in an atmosphere appropriate to the treatment of the patient.
